TEST SITES, WHITE CUBE, LONDON, ENGLAND

4 June - 10 July 2010

'TEST SITES includes a major new installation of BREATHING ROOM III, the third and largest in this series of works which contain and implicate the viewer as the figure in a shifting ground. As a physical manifestation of the gallery, BREATHING ROOM III is made from 15 interconnecting photo-luminescent 'space frames', the total volume of which is equal to that of the internal gallery space. The exhibition also includes a series of new massively extended 'blockworks' which use an architectonic language of stacking, propping and cantilever to suggest a tension indicative of our urban-bound human condition.'
